ABSTRACT

Designed for librarians and administrators new to the field as well as experienced online searchers, this bibliographic guide provides current and comprehensive information to aid in online searching. The normal types of materials, i.e., books, journals, newsletters, directories, bibliographies, indexes, and abstracts are listed; however, there are also several special interest sections, including extensive lists of training manuals and search aids for individual databases, sources of information on training opportunities and online user groups, and a directory of major professional organizations concerned with online searching. There are two bibliographies of journal articles: the first deals with retrieval systems and their use in general, while the second is arranged by subject area for information on individual databases and applicable online searching techniques. GUIDE TO ONLINE COMPUTER SEARCHING

BY

GREG BYERLY, CAROL TOBIN AND BECKI WHITAKER

This guide is intended to aid not only experienced online searchers, but also librarians and administrators new to the field in finding the various types of information available to aid in online searching. It was compiled for the Committee on the Education and Training of Search Analysts of the Machine-Assisted Reference Section of ALA's Reference and Adult Services Division to provide librarians interested in online searching with a current and comprehensive guide to the materials available. Information was gathered from various sources and letters were sent to all search services and data base producers to secure current lists of available publications.

The normal types of materials, i.e. books, journals, newsletters, directories, bibliographies, and indexes and abstracts, are included in this guide. However, several sections should be of special interest to online searchers. Extensive lists of both training manuals and search aids for individual data bases are included. Suggested sources of information concerning training opportunities and online users' groups are also listed. Appropriate sections and divisions of the major professional associations dealing with online searching are also identified. In all cases addresses and phone numbers are provided.

Two selective bibliographies are included. The first includes articles dealing with various aspects of retrieval services. The second is arranged by broad subject areas and contains references to articles concerning individual data bases or online searching of specific subject areas.
